

Haven Hats

pattern by Sonja Hakala

photographs and text © Sonja Hakala 2011

These simple crocheted hats are flexible enough to accommodate a number of different yarns (except perhaps the super chunky kind) and quick enough that you can work them up in a matter of hours. I call them Haven Hats because I've been making them from yarn I purchase in used clothing stores and donating them to the Upper Valley Haven for years.

Because I use yarn from here and there, it's difficult for me to tell you exactly how many ounces a particular hat will take. Suffice it to say that a skein of midweight acrylic yard with a sizable ball of yarn in the same weight but a different color for the topknot will do nicely. I use a G hook unless I combine two yarns of different weights—one lightweight and one midweight. Then I use an H hook.

All stitches are worked in the back loop only. Doing this gives the hats a ribbed effect. Ready? Let's begin.

Using a G hook, make a slip stitch for your first stitch leaving a long tail (at least six inches). Chain 43 stitches. Turn.

Single crochet (SC) in the second chain from hook. SC across chain, giving you 42 SC. Chain one. Turn.

Pattern Row 1: 5 SC in back loop.

Treble crochet (TRC) in back of next loop, SC in back of following loop. Repeat this TRC/SC pattern ten times all together (20 stitches).

17 SC in back loop. Chain one. Turn.

Pattern Row 2: SC in back loop. 42 stitches. Chain one. Turn. The photo above shows six ribs completed. Note the tail of yarn in the lower left corner of the photograph. This is the tail left from the slip stitch created at the beginning of the original chain row. This tail indicates what will become the top of the hat. The wide ribbing you see on the right of the photograph above will become the turned-up cuff of the hat.

© by Sonja Hakala, all rights reserved. For personal use only.

Continue the two pattern rows until your hat has 32 ribs.

When you complete 32 ribs, your hat will look like the picture at right. Your last row should be Pattern Row 1.

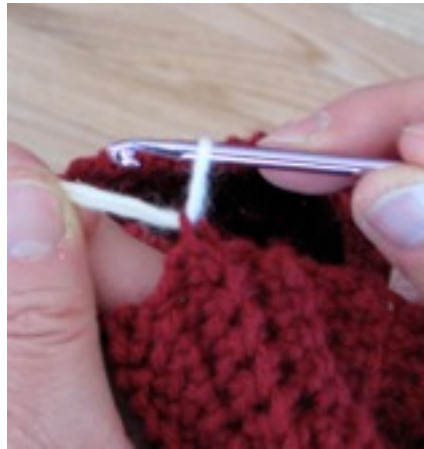

Note how the pattern stitch of TRC and SC makes the shape of the hat bow out.

Fold the hat in half so that your first row of chain stitches and your last row of the pattern are even with one another. This is the place where the hat is seamed together to make a tube. Use a slip stitch to join the two edges of the hat.

When you complete this seam, chain 50 stitches and tie off your yarn. Note in the picture at bottom left that the hat is now in a tube and you can see the tail left by your original row of chain stitches and the row of 50 chain stitches that you just made. The picture on the right is just my hand showing through the tube just to make this a bit more clear.

© by Sonja Hakala, all rights reserved.
For personal use only.

Choose a contrasting yarn to make the topknot on your hat. Attach this yarn to the top edge of your hat with a slip stitch. See pictures to the left and below.

Once attached, chain 20 stitches. See picture at right.

Return to the top edge of the hat. Use a slip stitch to attach this chain to the next stitch to the left of where you began. In other words, you are making a loop of your chain stitches. Continue in this fashion, making loops of 20 chain stitches each, until you have made your way all around the top edge of the hat. When you have completed this step, your hat should look like the picture at right. Knot off your topknot yarn, leaving about a two-inch tail.

Now return to the 50 chain stitches you made from the yarn in the body of your hat. Using your hook, weave this chain in and out of the stitches at the top of the hat, keeping as close as you can to the yarn in the topknot. When you have made the full circle, gently but firmly pull on this chain to cinch up the top of the hat. Make sure that all of the loops of the topknot are on the outside of the hat.

When you have snugged this up as well as you can (see picture above), tie the 50-chain piece to the tail you left when you made your first slip stitch. Knot it up good and tight then cut the extra, leaving about two inches of yarn.

Fluff up the topknot loops. Turn up the bottom of the hat in a ribbed cuff.

You're done! Wear and enjoy.

—Sonja Hakala

© by Sonja Hakala, all rights reserved.
For personal use only.